A federal appeals court in Chicago ruled against the Obama administration on Wednesday in a challenge to the President's sweeping $4 billion Clean Power Plan, delivering a major blow to Obama's signature effort to combat global warming. The court's ruling is expected to be appealed to the Supreme Court, but the immediate effect will be to halt the measure's implementation. The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Virginia became the first to hear arguments on the administration's plan to cut carbon emissions from existing power plants. While it is not the final word on the legal aspects of the rule, it does have the force of law and the two other appeals courts that have heard arguments so far — the 2nd Circuit in New York and the 9th Circuit in California — have been equally critical of the plan's legality. The ruling was a victory for the Republican-led states that are challenging the rules, and a defeat for the Obama administration. The administration launched its effort to cut power plant emissions in 2012, after concluding that the country's already aging power infrastructure could not easily be upgraded to meet stricter climate requirements. The plan uses the 2009 U.N. climate change deal to set mandatory carbon dioxide emission targets for power plants and a1d647c40b
