Unfortunately, a dark force launched a war against the country, and the city was destroyed by flames. Soon after that, you were sent by the government to another city to carry out a mission to stop the spread of evil. You wandered around the new city after arriving, and you met with an old man named Varu. He informed you that, as a result of the war, his family had lost all their land and livelihood, and as a reward, he had been chosen to become the custodian of the Elden Ring—the legendary treasure that can protect the world. As Varu led you to the Elden Ring, a shrine in the middle of the city, you discovered that, unknown to you, you were the guardian of the Elden Ring and the guardian of the world. As you followed Varu, however, you heard shouting from a building. The building was completely engulfed by flames, and a young lady named Dalia, who had been in the building and had already rescued a child from a terrible peril, collapsed. Afterwards, you found yourself back in your city, where you saved Dalia. Dalia told you that the flames had emanated from the Elden Ring, and you finally learned what had caused the war. It was the four demon artifacts, which had been in possession of the four leaders of the four houses that had declared war on the country at that time. The

One of the things I like most about Tarnished, is the distinct approach they took toward their combat system. From the very beginning I found the combat to be interesting. It did not feel tacked on, or easy to judge. You are thrown right into a fight against an enemy that uses basic hand to hand combat and there are no assists or power ups to help you out. So you will have to learn to do well in combat. The thing I enjoyed most was there was no auto attack button. Instead you have to push one of the four attack buttons with the right analog stick to attack. This gave the game an interesting feel. You could actually judge when to perform an attack vs. when to wait to try and do more damage. It gave me a little more control over my character. I also enjoyed the ability to dodge which either made your sword or cross bow aim off line. This helped me stay a step ahead of my opponent. This also made the combat style different then most games out there. It is designed to be as natural as possible. It gives the game an exciting feel and makes you feel like you really need to dodge and dodge. This was very refreshing. Another thing I like about the combat system is the strategy it creates in player. As you fight there will be moments where you need to use one of your many powerful skills. I found myself getting a little mad at my opponents when I missed out on some of my potential damage. This got me playing closer to the edge and making sure I used my various skills or spells in the most strategic way. Overall I enjoyed the combat system which added something to the game. The story and characters are your typical fantasy stories, but the art style and setting of the game are refreshing. It gives the entire setting a very refreshing feel. The graphics have a very real and stylized feel to them. Everything is very detailed and has a distinct feel. This gives you the impression that you are in the Lands Between and the game feels very alive and filled with life. This art style also helped to make the game feel very unique. In my opinion this really helped distinguish the game from others. I found myself going back to look at things in the game more times than I would have normally. This gave me a sense of hope and excitement bff6bb2d33
