"You'd have to drive the length of the country," she said. What does the future hold for the region's hops industry? "It's not really going to get much better," she said. When Josephine Black was a little girl, people only had to leave Tampa to find great Cuban coffee or unique microbrews. Now that's all over. "Now people can buy things where they didn't have the opportunity before," said Josephine Black. "They've come down and opened up a number of coffee shops and they've done that to the point where it's now not as precious as we used to think." While the Gainesville area is famous for its coffee, new breweries are popping up every week. We asked some locals if they care to explain why the area is suddenly awash in microbrews. They say business is booming, not only here, but all over the state. For one, Tampa Bay's population has doubled in the last decade. Also, as people have more access to local products, more people want to buy them. "It's just become the local option and they're just doing it," said Josephine Black. "They're the ones who have the passion. That's what we've always done here. It's about our passion for the area." Zeal for coffee culture isn't the only thing that keeps people here. Also, hot water. "I think that's because it's Florida," said Brian Korte, who runs a website
