I'm wondering if the @Controller and @PreAuthorize annotation are really needed? I was looking at the source code and I saw that they are doing the same thing as I would do with an @RequestMapping and @RequestMapping annotation. Am I correct? Thank you for your response. A: No, they are not necessary. You can annotate your controllers with @RequestMapping or @Controller without any annotations. For doing the same, Spring has one class ResponseStatusSupport which does all the work for us. The @Controller and @RequestMapping are registered as beans in autowiring candidates for the return values in ResponseStatusSupport. @Controller public class ApplicationController { @RequestMapping(value = "/api/v1/applications") public ResponseEntity list() { return new ResponseEntity(HttpStatus.OK); } } ResponseStatusSupport class @Component public class ResponseStatusSupport implements ResponseStatusHandler { @Override public HttpHeaders handleResponseStatus(HttpServletRequestResponse response) throws IOException, ServletException { response.setContentType(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON); return null; } @Override public HttpStatus getStatusCode() { return HttpStatus.OK;
